A lot of teachers don't necessarily do that. I think a lot of teachers are so stuck with just teaching by the books, just teaching right out of the curriculum. It's not so much that they don't create a safe space for students to learn.

White counterparts. This has been something pervasive for me since early in my career.

The school environment is adverse for Black students. Black students can not assume any of the necessary safety, inclusion, positive interaction, recognition for talent and abilities or the daily environment they enter into and that they spend enormous energy learning to cope with.

In my experiences the language and descriptions used for students who are Black, a lot of language is making statements like “they are wild”. I have heard of one student being referred to as “feral” when [that student] was just struggling to meet the expectations of the environment. Rather than identifying that a student struggling with transition from preferred items to non-preferred, there’s a quality we see. I have had conversations with [administrators] who are also evaluating the home life as a factor that contributes to their problem behaviour rather than looking at what is happening within the context of the school environment. They look outside and they want to place the blame somewhere else. It is external factors that come from a very biased place.

When I was a French teacher I had 6 Black boys in my class who were doing well. I went on leave and when I returned, they were all gone. None of them were in my French classes. I said, “Where’d they all go? Did they all move?” The response was, “Oh, no, they’re in Spec Ed so they’re exempt from French now.”

he was bored in his classes. And I was explaining that we are keeping the bar low for him. If my student is asking for this and I am seeing this in him and so many others, then why are we keeping him in applied? ... We fought for two years. He only was able to move when we got a new principal. Once the new principal came, that was it. He helped me help the student get to that school. So I think we're setting our bar low very much for our Black students, especially our Black male students.

I do think that Black students are really just being funneled into [our programs for students with intellectual disabilities], especially for students who are English Language Learners. When we have Black immigrant students coming in and they are struggling, I've seen a few instances of these students being put into [these programs]. And when students graduate is a major life decision that we've made for them... [Theets wg (e)Wtn th.7 (h1006000300F7>-6 <0

Some of these parents, especially ... immigrants, don't seem to understand the way the system works. I remember few times I had to meet with the Superintendent. I could not believe how they brought the principal, the social worker, the psychologist and all the others. How can a parent, a poor immigrant parent who doesn't speak English very well, how can she or he understand the whole system if nobody is there to advocate for them?

There's also considerable intimidation that parents have faced when they try to engage with teachers, with administration, with senior administration and so on. It's really deeply unfair and unjust.

The school environment is systemically averse to Black students. The “educators” are not held to a standard that would have them check and desist any racist (microaggressions and Schools with a large Black student population don't have enough resources (no books that include Black and Brown representation, lack of technology, etc.). They are unable to raise money through parent groups, and classroom libraries are funded by teachers.

The key issue facing Black students is the racism we are about to breed through [this strategy to address anti-Black racism]. Kids are not inherently racist and by opening this can of worms you are actually INTRODUCING the concept of racism into their susceptible minds. Disgraceful!
